ACT 1. SCENE 1.

now we see that there is no discrimination between what is good and what is best, for all is well all the time. the question is, how will you spend it? what is most important to you? no, not later... right now. you don't have time to waste. how will you reclaim joy for yourself and everyone around you? what is the call of your soul telling you? what are you telling yourself? how do you wish to enjoy yourself? what do you wish to discover?

how do you wish to make love with life itself? and what even is making love for that matter?

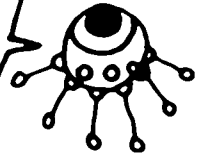

perhaps it is the satisfaction of striving to hold the feeling of love for as long as possible...

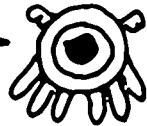

perhaps it is the satisfaction of learning the techniques that prolong the feeling of pleasure for as long as possible... after all, if you knew you were going to die tomorrow, wouldn't you want to live the most pleasurable day today? why does it seem that today's pleasures are tomorrow's sorrows?

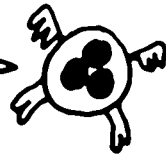

perhaps the real sorrow is in the grasping for what isn't, rather than the cherishing and joyful cultivation of what is...

why do we wish for a love that is both all-inclusive and yet all-exclusive?

because we desire to be unified, inside and out. deep down, we wish to be one with all and for all to be one with us.

so then, why do we get so hung up about one-in-particular of the all?

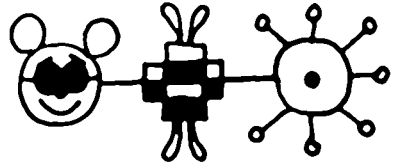

perhaps because one-in-particular is seeking the highest joy it knows right now.

INTERMISSION.

ACT 1 . SCENE 2 .

all you have to remember is,
you are the light within yourself.

you have to experience
the explosion of light within you, in which the material disappears, and only immaterial light remains.

in all honesty, i don't really know why i want what i want. or, i should say, why my soul wants what it wants. but it knows it wants it. why, dear lord, why? and what in the world am i supposed to do about it?

you don't have to do anything really. just know you already have everything you could possibly desire and leave the rest to me. remember always that it is an act of grace that i should grant you any of your desires at all. so say thank you as often as you can and spread your beauty, joy, and gifts wherever and whenever you are able, and never forget that you are the love and light which you seek.

*believe it and
be merry* 🐻

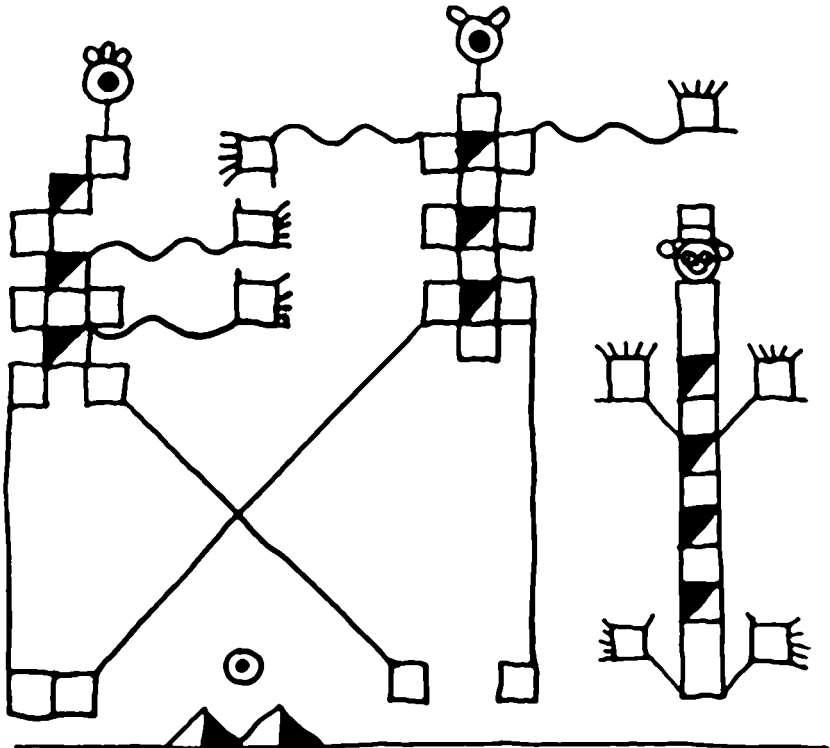

ACT 1. SCENE 3.

it seems like wants can be so fickle. how do you know what you want is what you really want, before something else shows up that you couldn't have even imagined wanting before.....

How WILL I KNOW???????

you will know because your discernment is so fine-tuned.

ACT 2. SCENE 1.

what foolish errands are these?

i only wish to kiss the one i long for most, and even she i do not wish to kiss. ♠♠♠

the answer, my friend, is RENUNCIATION.

i renunciate these words. i renunciate these pictures. i renunciate this book. i renunciate the need to be or not to be. i renunciate you. i renunciate me. i renunciate all. i renunciate one. i renunciate

ACT 2 . SCENE 2 .

shiva: so where do we go from here?

shakti: we simply keep renouncing as we go on,
always remembering that there is something to gain and lose or lose and gain at any moment.

shiva: why does that make me feel strange inside?

shakti: because you haven't yet renounced your feeling of strangeness.

shiva: where does that leave us?

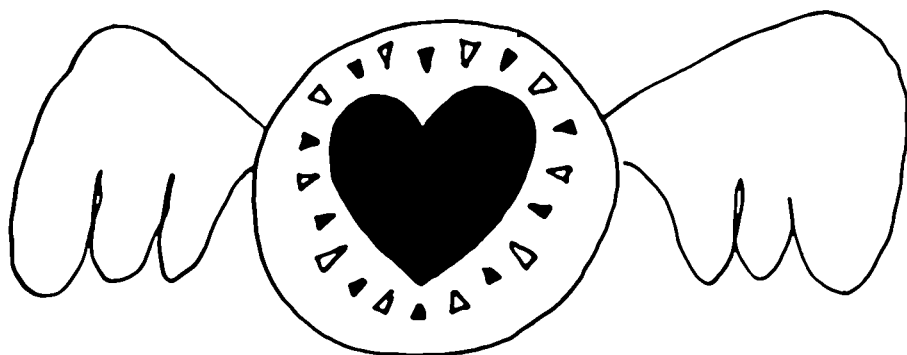

shakti: when there is nothing left to renunciate, that is where you will find the thing you are searching for.
that is where you will discover that which cannot be renounced. for you see, true renunciation renunciates even itself.

shakti: XXX NOW SOAR XXXXX

i know somewhere deep down love and forgiveness are the answer, found somewhere deep down inside the nothingness. it's hard to tell what that means in any practical, actionable terms, but to believe in it at all is the first step to being it, as all beliefs lead to being in some form or another. so don't lose hope, and don't get too down-hearted. we're all gonna shine on someday soon.

in truth, love is as easy as gentle falling snow.

in truth, love is as easy as gentle falling snow.

i suppose all things are, really.
